Extract One

You hear a novelist talking about writing her second book.

Voces · Novelist: Sonia, inglés británico

> Everyone warns you about the second novel, and I assumed they were exaggerating. The first one I'd written in the evenings, for nobody in particular, with no idea whether it would ever see the light of day. The second came with a deadline, an advance and an editor who kept asking, very politely, how it was coming along. I'd sit down at nine, and by eleven I'd have rewritten the same paragraph four times[1]. What finally broke the spell was rather mundane. I stopped working at my desk, which had started to feel like a courtroom, and took a notebook to the café round the corner, where nobody knew or cared what I was doing. The book I eventually handed in is not the one I set out to write. It's quieter, less ambitious on the surface. But I'd say it's more honest, and I'm prouder of it than I am of the first, which still surprises me[2].

1 · A · Detalle

Pregunta: What does the novelist say about writing her second book?

A It was hard to make progress because of the pressure she was under.
Correcta. La presión está enumerada (a deadline, an advance and an editor) y su efecto es que no avanza: by eleven I'd have rewritten the same paragraph four times. La opción lo resume sin repetir ninguna de esas palabras.

B She regretted having accepted an advance for it.
Falla (eco léxico §4.1). Recoge an advance, que es solo una parte de la presión. No dice que se arrepienta de haberlo aceptado.

C It went better once she kept to a strict daily routine.
Falla (mencionado y descartado §4.2). La rutina existía (I'd sit down at nine) y no funcionaba. Lo que la desbloqueó fue cambiar de sitio: took a notebook to the café round the corner.

Teoría: §5.3 Part 1: tipos de pregunta · §3.1 Lo que se dice y lo que se da a entender

2 · C · Sentimiento

Pregunta: How does she feel about the book she finally handed in?

A disappointed that it is less ambitious than she intended
Falla (eco léxico §4.1, mencionado y descartado §4.2). Recoge less ambitious on the surface, pero la frase sigue con But I'd say it's more honest: la falta de ambición es solo aparente y no la lamenta.

B anxious about how it will compare with her first novel
Falla (ausente §4.8). Compara los dos libros, pero para decir que prefiere el segundo. No expresa ninguna inquietud por la comparación: I'm prouder of it than I am of the first.

C surprised by how proud she is of it
Correcta. Lo dice en la última frase: I'm prouder of it than I am of the first, which still surprises me. La reacción final es la que cuenta (§3.3).

Teoría: §3.3 La segunda idea manda · §5.3 Part 1: tipos de pregunta

Extract Two

You hear two friends discussing a television documentary series.

Voces · Woman: Libby, inglés británico · Man: Ryan, inglés británico

Woman	Did you catch the final episode of that ocean series last night?
Man	I did. Visually it was extraordinary – those shots of the squid at two thousand metres. I've no idea how they managed it.
Woman	Oh, the camera work's never been the problem. It's the narration I can't stand. Every time they show you something remarkable, there's this booming voice telling you how remarkable it is, as if you couldn't work it out for yourself[3].
Man	I suppose they're aiming at a family audience.
Woman	Children aren't stupid, though. My nephew watched it with me, and he was the one who asked why the squid glowed. The programme never bothered to explain.
Man	Fair point. Mind you, they did finish with that section on the research team, which I thought was the best bit[4]. You actually got a sense of how the science gets done.
Woman	Yes, I'll give them that[4]. Ten minutes of substance at the end of six hours.

3 · B · Actitud y opinión

Pregunta: What does the woman criticise about the series?

A the quality of the underwater filming
Falla (mencionado y descartado §4.2). Lo menciona para descartarlo: the camera work's never been the problem.

B the narrator's habit of stating the obvious
Correcta. It's the narration I can't stand: la voz cuenta lo que el espectador ya ve, telling you how remarkable it is, as if you couldn't work it out for yourself. Eso es decir lo obvio.

C the decision to make it for a family audience
Falla (voz equivocada §4.4). El público familiar es la explicación que propone él (I suppose they're aiming at a family audience). Ella no critica que vaya dirigida a familias, sino que trate a los niños como si no entendieran: Children aren't stupid, though.

Teoría: §5.3 Part 1: tipos de pregunta · §3.2 Voz propia y voces ajenas

4 · C · Acuerdo

Pregunta: What do the two friends agree about?

A The series went on for longer than necessary.
Falla (voz equivocada §4.4). Solo lo da a entender ella, con ironía: Ten minutes of substance at the end of six hours. Él no dice nada parecido.

B Children would have enjoyed it more than adults.
Falla (ausente §4.8). Hablan de un niño que vio la serie (My nephew watched it with me), pero nadie compara cuánto la disfrutarían niños y adultos.

C The part about the scientists was worthwhile.
Correcta. Él: that section on the research team, which I thought was the best bit. Ella lo concede: Yes, I'll give them that. Es el único punto que suscriben los dos (§3.6).

Teoría: §3.6 Acuerdo y desacuerdo entre hablantes · §2.4 Matización

Extract Three

You hear a sports coach talking about working with young athletes.

Voces · Coach: Andrew, inglés norteamericano

> When I started coaching, I thought my job was to spot talent. You watch a group of twelve-year-olds, one of them is obviously quicker, stronger, better coordinated, and you pour your energy into that child. It took me an embarrassingly long time to notice that the stars at twelve were very rarely the ones still competing at eighteen. Often they'd simply grown early[5], and once everyone else caught up, it turned out they'd never had to learn how to lose. The late developers, on the other hand, had spent years being beaten and had worked out how to deal with it. So these days I'm far more interested in how a youngster responds to a bad afternoon than in how fast they run on a good one. I'm also much more careful about telling parents their child is going to make it. I've said it before, and I've been wrong more often than I'd care to admit[6].

5 · B · Detalle

Pregunta: What point does the coach make about athletes who stand out at the age of twelve?

A They need more support than other children.
Falla (voz equivocada §4.4). Es lo que él pensaba al empezar (you pour your energy into that child), la idea que ha abandonado.

B They often owe their early success to physical maturity.
Correcta. Often they'd simply grown early: su ventaja era haber crecido antes que los demás, y desaparecía once everyone else caught up.

C They are frequently pushed too hard by their parents.
Falla (eco léxico §4.1). Los padres aparecen más tarde y en otro contexto (telling parents their child is going to make it). Nadie habla de presionar a los niños.

Teoría: §5.3 Part 1: tipos de pregunta · §3.1 Lo que se dice y lo que se da a entender

6 · A · Detalle

Pregunta: What does the coach admit about his conversations with parents?

A He has been too optimistic in the past.
Correcta. Ha dicho a padres que su hijo llegaría lejos y se ha equivocado: I've said it before, and I've been wrong more often than I'd care to admit. Es decir, ha sido demasiado optimista.

B He finds their expectations difficult to deal with.
Falla (ausente §4.8). Habla de sus propios errores, no de lo que esperan los padres.

C He now refuses to discuss their children's prospects.
Falla (grado y alcance §4.5). Dice much more careful, no que se niegue a hablar del tema.
