Good evening, everyone. When people find out that I study lighthouse keepers, they tend to picture a lonely old man with a beard, gazing out to sea. In reality, most keepers worked in teams of three, and the job had far more to do with routine than with romance. My own interest goes back to my grandfather. He wasn't a keeper himself – people often assume he was – but a boatman [7], who spent thirty years taking supplies out to the rock stations off the west coast of Scotland and came home with stories about the men he met there.

The keeper's most important duty, of course, was the light itself. Before electricity arrived, the lamps burned paraffin [8], and every morning began with hours of trimming wicks and polishing lenses, because even a thin film of soot could cut the range of the beam by several miles. Visitors were often struck by the contrast between the lens room, which was spotless, and the living quarters, which were rather less so. Keepers were inspected regularly, and what the inspectors examined first wasn't the kitchen or the bedrooms. It was the brass [9].

Then there was the weather. On a rock station, the relief boat was meant to arrive every four weeks, but in winter it could be held up for a month or more. One keeper's diary from 1937 describes the men living on porridge for every meal, and says that what they missed most wasn't meat, or even fresh vegetables. It was tobacco [10], and several of them took to rolling cigarettes from dried tea leaves, with predictable results. Families weren't allowed on the rock stations at all, which is why the shore stations [11], where wives and children could live alongside the keepers, were so highly prized.

Isolation affected people in very different ways. Some keepers took up handicrafts – there are lovely examples of ships built inside bottles, and a surprising amount of knitting. But the pastime that comes up again and again in their letters is chess [12]. Games were often played by post against keepers on other stations, and a single game could last the best part of a year.

> Living so close together, the men inevitably fell out from time to time, and the authorities had an interesting way of dealing with it. A nineteenth-century rule required keepers to write down any disagreement – not in their private letters, but in a special register[13] that the inspectors read on every visit. The idea was to discourage quarrels, and by most accounts it worked, mainly because nobody wanted their arguments discussed at headquarters.
> Automation finally brought the profession to an end, and the last keepers left their stations in the late nineteen-nineties. Many of them found the change hard. One man I interviewed told me that what he missed wasn't the sea, or even the solitude, but the clock[14]: the fact that every hour of his day had had a purpose. As for the buildings, several have been turned into holiday cottages, and one, rather fittingly, has become a small museum[15], run by the grandchildren of its last keeper. So the next time you see a lighthouse on a postcard, spare a thought for the people who kept it shining, often in conditions most of us would find impossible.

Explicaciones

7 • boatman

Frase: The speaker's grandfather worked as a boatman, taking provisions to remote lighthouses.

Se oye: but a boatman

Se acepta: boatman

Corrige una idea extendida: He wasn't a keeper himself – people often assume he was – but a boatman. La frase del papel ya anuncia el oficio con worked as a.

No vale keeper (candidato §6.3). Lo descarta: He wasn't a keeper himself.

No vale boat man (ortografía §6.5). Se escribe en una sola palabra.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §3.3 La segunda idea manda

8 • paraffin

Frase: Until the arrival of electricity, the lamps ran on paraffin.

Se oye: the lamps burned paraffin

Se acepta: paraffin

Before electricity arrived, the lamps burned paraffin: ran on reformula «quemaban».

No vale kerosene (sinónimo §6.4). Es el nombre americano del mismo combustible, pero no es la palabra que se oye.

No vale parafin (ortografía §6.5). Lleva doble f y una sola r: paraffin.

Teoría: §6.4 Qué se escribe · §6.5 Ortografía

9 • brass

Frase: The first thing inspectors checked on a visit was the brass.

Se oye: It was the brass

Se acepta: brass

La negación descarta dos candidatos antes de dar la respuesta: what the inspectors examined first wasn't the kitchen or the bedrooms. It was the brass.

No vale kitchen (candidato §6.3). Descartado: wasn't the kitchen.

No vale lens room (candidato §6.3). Es lo que impresionaba a los visitantes (which was spotless), no lo que revisaban primero los inspectores.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §2.3 Señales del discurso oral

10 • tobacco

Frase: A diary records that during a long delay, the keepers longed above all for tobacco.

Se oye: It was tobacco

Se acepta: tobacco

La misma pauta: dos candidatos descartados y después la respuesta: what they missed most wasn't meat, or even fresh vegetables. It was tobacco.

No vale fresh vegetables (candidato §6.3). Descartado: or even fresh vegetables.

No vale porridge (candidato §6.3). Es lo que comían (living on porridge for every meal), no lo que echaban de menos.

No vale tobaco (ortografía §6.5). Lleva doble c: tobacco.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §6.5 Ortografía

11 • shore stations

Frase: The shore stations were popular postings because keepers' families could live there.

Se oye: the shore stations

Se acepta: shore stations

La condición de la frase (las familias) solo la cumplen las estaciones de costa: the shore stations, where wives and children could live alongside the keepers, were so highly prized. El verbo were del papel pide un plural.

No vale rock stations (candidato §6.3). Allí las familias no podían vivir: Families weren't allowed on the rock stations at all.

No vale shore station (forma §6.4). Se oye en plural y la frase lo exige (were).

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §6.4 Qué se escribe

12 • chess

Frase: The hobby that keepers refer to most frequently in their correspondence is chess.

Se oye: in their letters is chess

Se acepta: chess

Después del contraste con But: the pastime that comes up again and again in their letters is chess. En el papel, correspondence reformula letters.

No vale knitting (candidato §6.3). Aparece como ejemplo de manualidades, antes del contraste con But.

No vale handicrafts (candidato §6.3). Es lo que hacían algunos (Some keepers took up handicrafts), no lo que más se menciona.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §2.3 Señales del discurso oral

13 • (special) register

Frase: Any argument between keepers had to be noted in a special register that officials examined.

Se oye: in a special register

Se acepta: special register · register

Descarta las cartas y da la respuesta: not in their private letters, but in a special register that the inspectors read on every visit. Se acepta con o sin special.

No vale letters (candidato §6.3). Descartado (not in their private letters), y además no encaja tras a.

No vale registry (sinónimo §6.4). No es la palabra que se oye.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §6.4 Qué se escribe

14 • clock

Frase: A former keeper told the speaker that, once he had left, it was the clock he missed most.

Se oye: but the clock

Se acepta: clock

Otra vez dos negaciones antes de la respuesta: what he missed wasn't the sea, or even the solitude, but the clock.

No vale sea (candidato §6.3). Descartado: wasn't the sea.

No vale solitude (candidato §6.3). Descartado: or even the solitude.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §2.3 Señales del discurso oral

15 • (small) museum

Frase: One former lighthouse is now a small museum, managed by the family of the last keeper.

Se oye: has become a small museum

Se acepta: small museum · museum

Es el único edificio que gestiona la familia: one, rather fittingly, has become a small museum, run by the grandchildren of its last keeper. Se acepta con o sin small.

No vale holiday cottage (candidato §6.3). Es el destino de otros faros (several have been turned into holiday cottages); no lo gestiona la familia del último farero.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §6.4 Qué se escribe
