Transcripción

Voz · Emily, inglés irlandés

When our trust took over the walled garden at Ashcombe twelve years ago, it had been abandoned since the Second World War. Brambles had reached the tops of the walls, the glasshouses had long since collapsed, and a family of foxes had moved into what was left of the potting shed. We assumed our biggest problem would be the brambles. In fact, what held us up for the first three years was the soil [7], which had been worked so hard for a century that almost nothing would grow in it.

Our breakthrough came from an unexpected source. The estate's own records had been destroyed in a fire, but the head gardener's granddaughter still had his seed catalogues [8], and he'd marked every variety he ordered with a small cross. We spent a whole winter matching his crosses to old nursery lists. That gave us over two hundred fruits and vegetables, many of which nobody grows any more.

The walls themselves were the real engine of the garden. Brick absorbs heat during the day and releases it slowly at night, so a south-facing wall could be several degrees warmer than the open ground. On a sunny morning in March you can put your hand on the brick and feel the difference. The Victorians took this a stage further. Some walls were hollow, with small furnaces at the base [9], so that hot air circulated inside them on frosty nights. We have three of these, and we've restored one, mainly to show visitors how it worked. We don't actually light it, though – the insurers made that very clear [10].

> Against those warm walls, the gardeners trained fruit trees to grow completely flat, which kept them small enough to manage and pressed the fruit right up against the brick. We've replanted almost ninety trees this way, mostly pears and apricots. People are always surprised by the apricots, but in the eighteen-eighties this garden was sending peaches and figs up to the house, and even pineapples [11], which were grown in a pit heated by fermenting manure.
> None of this would have been possible without labour on a scale we can barely imagine. In its heyday the garden employed fourteen men and boys [12]. The youngest, some of them only twelve, slept in a small, damp building against the back wall, and their job was to keep the stoves alight [13] through the night. Their wages were a fraction of what the head gardener earned, but they were fed, and for many families that was what mattered. That building is the one thing we've deliberately left unrestored, so that visitors can see how they lived.
> The question we're asked most often is whether it's all worth it, given that the vegetables we grow cost about five times [14] what you'd pay in a supermarket. My answer is that the garden was never really about food, however much the family enjoyed their asparagus. Even in the nineteenth century, buying it would have been cheaper. It was about display [15]. A Victorian landowner served pineapples to his guests in January for much the same reason that people today buy expensive cars. What we're preserving, in the end, isn't so much a kitchen garden as a record of ambition, and of the extraordinary skill of the people who made that ambition grow.

Explicaciones

7 • soil

Frase: Contrary to the team's expectations, it was the soil that caused the longest delay at the start.

Se oye: what held us up for the first three years was the soil

Se acepta: soil

Primero la expectativa (We assumed our biggest problem would be the brambles) y luego la realidad: what held us up for the first three years was the soil.

No vale brambles (candidato §6.3). Es lo que esperaban; la frase pide lo contrario (Contrary to).

No vale glasshouses (candidato §6.3). Forman parte de la descripción inicial; no se dice que retrasaran nada.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §3.3 La segunda idea manda

8 • (seed) catalogues / (seed) catalogs

Frase: The head gardener's seed catalogues, which were still owned by a relative, showed the team what had once been grown.

Se oye: his seed catalogues

Se acepta: seed catalogues · catalogues · seed catalogs · catalogs

Los conservaba la nieta: the head gardener's granddaughter still had his seed catalogues, con una cruz en cada variedad. El were del papel pide un plural.

No vale records (candidato §6.3). Eran los del estate y se perdieron: had been destroyed in a fire.

No vale seed catalogue (forma §6.4). Se oye en plural y la frase lo exige.

No vale catalouges (ortografía §6.5). La terminación es -logues.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §6.5 Ortografía

9 • (small) furnaces

Frase: Some walls had small furnaces built into the bottom of them.

Se oye: with small furnaces at the base

Se acepta: small furnaces · furnaces

Los muros huecos tenían hornos en la base: Some walls were hollow, with small furnaces at the base. En el papel, at the base pasa a ser the bottom of them. Se acepta con o sin small.

No vale hot air (candidato §6.3). Es lo que circulaba por dentro del muro, no lo que estaba en la base.

No vale fires (sinónimo §6.4). No es la palabra que se oye.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §6.4 Qué se escribe

10 • insurers

Frase: The restored heated wall is never lit, on the instructions of the insurers.

Se oye: the insurers made that very clear

Se acepta: insurers

No lo encienden por las aseguradoras: We don't actually light it, though – the insurers made that very clear. En el papel, on the instructions of reformula made that very clear.

No vale visitors (candidato §6.3). El muro se restauró para enseñárselo a ellos (mainly to show visitors how it worked); no deciden nada.

No vale insurance (sinónimo §6.4). Se oye insurers (las aseguradoras), no insurance.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §6.4 Qué se escribe

11 • pineapples

Frase: In the 1880s the garden even supplied pineapples, which were raised in a pit kept warm by manure.

Se oye: and even pineapples

Se acepta: pineapples

Es lo más sorprendente de la lista: and even pineapples, which were grown in a pit heated by fermenting manure. El even del papel recoge el mismo matiz.

No vale apricots (candidato §6.3). Es lo que sorprende hoy a los visitantes, no lo que crecía en el foso.

No vale peaches (candidato §6.3). Se enviaban a la casa, pero no del foso.

No vale pineapple (forma §6.4). Se oye en plural y la frase lo exige (which were).

12 • 14 (men and boys) / fourteen (men and boys)

Frase: At its busiest, the garden had a workforce of 14 men and boys.

Se oye: employed fourteen men and boys

Se acepta: 14 men and boys · 14 · fourteen men and boys · fourteen

In its heyday the garden employed fourteen men and boys: At its busiest reformula In its heyday. Las cifras pueden escribirse con números.

No vale 12 (candidato §6.3). Es la edad de los más jóvenes (some of them only twelve).

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §6.4 Qué se escribe

13 • stoves

Frase: The youngest workers had to make sure the stoves were kept burning overnight.

Se oye: keep the stoves alight

Se acepta: stoves

Era la tarea de los más jóvenes: their job was to keep the stoves alight through the night. En el papel, kept burning reformula alight.

No vale furnaces (candidato §6.3). Son los de los muros, en otra parte de la charla; aquí se oye stoves.

No vale stove (forma §6.4). Se oye en plural y were lo exige.

Teoría: §6.3 Varios candidatos para un mismo hueco · §6.4 Qué se escribe

14 • five times / 5 times

Frase: Produce from the garden costs roughly five times as much as food bought in shops.

Se oye: cost about five times

Se acepta: five times · 5 times

Comparación de precios: the vegetables we grow cost about five times what you'd pay in a supermarket. La frase pide un multiplicador delante de as much as.

No vale five (forma §6.4). No encaja: roughly five as much no es gramatical; hace falta times.

Teoría: §6.4 Qué se escribe · §6.2 Los 45 segundos: predecir cada hueco

15 • display

Frase: The speaker believes the Victorian garden existed mainly for the purpose of display.

Se oye: It was about display

Se acepta: display

Primero descarta la comida (the garden was never really about food) y luego da la respuesta: It was about display.

No vale food (candidato §6.3). Descartado: never really about food.

No vale ambition (candidato §6.3). Es lo que el jardín documenta hoy (a record of ambition), no su finalidad.

No vale showing off (sinónimo §6.4). No es lo que se oye.
