Extract One

You hear an architect talking about a building she designed early in her career.

Voces · Architect: Natasha, inglés australiano

> The building that taught me the most is one I'd rather people didn't look up. It was a community centre, my first proper commission, and I was determined that it would make a statement. Glass on three sides, a roof that seemed to float – the photographs won me a prize, which, looking back, was probably the worst thing that could have happened. Within a year the staff were taping cardboard over the windows because the main hall was unbearable by mid-morning, and the floating roof turned out to be rather less impressive once it was leaking into the nursery. The council were very gracious about it. Nobody said 'I told you so', although at least two of them had[2]. What I took away wasn't that ambition is a mistake. It's that I'd designed for the people who would photograph the building rather than the people who would spend their days in it. I still have the prize somewhere. I keep meaning to put it on the shelf above my desk, as a sort of warning[1].

1 · C · Actitud y opinión

Pregunta: How does the architect now regard the prize she won for the building?

A as an achievement she is still quietly proud of Falla (ausente §4.8). Que lo conserve (I still have the prize somewhere) no indica orgullo; nunca lo expresa.

B as a symbol of the dangers of being too ambitious
Falla (mencionado y descartado §4.2). Lo descarta expresamente: What I took away wasn't that ambition is a mistake.

C as a reminder of a mistake she should not repeat
Correcta. Ya lo anticipa (looking back, was probably the worst thing that could have happened) y lo cierra al final: quiere tener el premio a la vista as a sort of warning. El error es haber diseñado para la foto.

Teoría: §3.1 Lo que se dice y lo que se da a entender · §5.3 Part 1: tipos de pregunta

2 · A · Detalle

Pregunta: What does she imply about the members of the council?

A Some of them had foreseen the problems.
Correcta. Nobody said 'I told you so', although at least two of them had: al menos dos se lo habían advertido antes. La inferencia sale de la elipsis de had (§3.1).

B They had pressed her to make the design more striking.
Falla (ausente §4.8). La ambición era suya (I was determined that it would make a statement); nadie dice que el ayuntamiento la empujara.

C They blamed her publicly for the building's faults.
Falla (mencionado y descartado §4.2). Se menciona para negarlo: The council were very gracious about it.

Teoría: §3.1 Lo que se dice y lo que se da a entender · §2.4 Matización

Extract Two

You hear two colleagues talking about a team-building weekend organised by their company.

Voces · Woman: Emily, inglés irlandés · Man: Mitchell, inglés neozelandés

Woman	So, how was the team-building weekend? I gather you were all sent up a mountain.
Man	We were. In the rain. Which I'm told was not on the programme, although it did more for team spirit than anything that was[3]. By the second day we were united by a common enemy, and the enemy was the facilitator.
Woman	Oh dear. What did she do?
Man	Nothing malicious. She just had a slogan for everything, usually printed on a laminated card. Every time someone slipped in the mud, it was an opportunity for growth. I've never grown so much in my life.
Woman	To be fair, my team came back from the last one actually speaking to each other[4], which is more than they managed before.
Man	Oh, I don't doubt it works on some level. I just think you could get the same result for a fraction of the cost by letting people have lunch together once in a while.
Woman	Now that I would sign up for.

3 · B · Actitud y opinión

Pregunta: What does the man suggest about the weekend?

A The facilitator had treated the participants unfairly.
Falla (mencionado y descartado §4.2). Lo descarta él mismo: Nothing malicious. La critica con ironía por sus eslóganes, no por injusta.

B The bad weather did more for the group than the planned activities.
Correcta. La lluvia was not on the programme, although it did more for team spirit than anything that was: lo imprevisto unió más que lo programado.

C Some of the activities were too physically demanding.
Falla (ausente §4.8). Hay barro y resbalones (someone slipped in the mud), pero nadie dice que las actividades fueran demasiado duras.

Teoría: §3.1 Lo que se dice y lo que se da a entender · §2.4 Matización

4 · C · Actitud y opinión

Pregunta: What is the woman's attitude to team-building weekends?

A She is keen to go on the next one.
Falla (eco léxico §4.1). Now that I would sign up for se refiere a las comidas que propone él, no a otro fin de semana.

B She regards them as a waste of money.
Falla (voz equivocada §4.4). Se acerca a la postura de él (for a fraction of the cost), y aun él admite que funciona en parte. Ella no lo dice.

C She believes they can achieve something worthwhile.
Correcta. To be fair, my team came back from the last one actually speaking to each other, which is more than they managed before: la ironía va contra el equipo, no contra el fin de semana, que sí sirvió.

Extract Three

You hear a historian talking about how people in the past are portrayed.

Voces · Historian: Ryan, inglés británico

> There's a popular idea – you'll find it repeated in any number of television documentaries – that people in the Middle Ages hardly ever washed and thought nothing of it. It makes for a good story, and it flatters us. The trouble is that the sources say otherwise. Town records are full of complaints about public bathhouses, not because nobody used them but because too many people did [5], and they were noisy. Household accounts list soap among the regular purchases, often more than one kind. What medieval people lacked wasn't a sense of hygiene; it was hot water on tap, which is a rather different thing. I find it telling that we're quite happy to believe our ancestors were dirty, but far more reluctant to accept that they might have been as vain as we are. If I had to sum up what my research has taught me, it's that the past is a good deal less foreign than we'd like to think [6].

5 · A · Propósito

Pregunta: Why does the historian mention complaints about public bathhouses?

A to provide evidence that washing was a common habit
Correcta. Viene justo después de the sources say otherwise: las quejas existían not because nobody used them but because too many people did. Prueban que bañarse era habitual.

B to show that the bathhouses were badly run
Falla (lógica alterada §4.6). Cambia la causa de las quejas: no era la gestión, sino que había demasiada gente y ruido (and they were noisy).

C to illustrate how unpleasant life in medieval towns could be
Falla (no responde §4.3). Unos baños ruidosos pueden sugerirlo, pero la mención no sirve para eso: es una prueba contra la idea popular.

Teoría: §3.5 Función y propósito · §3.2 Voz propia y voces ajenas

6 · B · Actitud y opinión

Pregunta: What does the historian say his research has taught him?

A Medieval people cared more about their appearance than we do.
Falla (grado y alcance §4.5). Dice as vain as we are: tan presumidos como nosotros, no más.

B People in the past were more like us than we tend to assume.
Correcta. Lo resume en la última frase: the past is a good deal less foreign than we'd like to think. La gente de entonces se parecía a nosotros más de lo que suponemos.

C Television documentaries tend to misrepresent history.
Falla (eco léxico §4.1, grado y alcance §4.5). Recoge television documentaries, pero solo los cita como lugar donde se repite una idea; no generaliza sobre los documentales.

Teoría: §5.3 Part 1: tipos de pregunta · §3.2 Voz propia y voces ajenas
